ARGUMENT.

ACT I.—Henry “the Fowler,” King of Germany, has come to Antwerp to summon his lieges against the Hungarians, who threaten the eastern frontier; he finds the chiefs divided and without a leader—Gottfried, the young son of the late Duke having mysteriously disappeared, and Frederick Telramund, in virtue of his wife’s royal descent, claiming the sovereignty of Brabant. Telramund openly accuses Elsa (Gottfried’s sister) of having murdered her brother to win the crown for herself; Elsa is summoned to appear and answer the charge; the King decrees that her cause shall be submitted to ordeal of battle between Telramund and any champion Elsa may choose to defend her. She describes a Knight whom she has seen in a vision, and conjures him to fight for her. After repeated appeals, a skiff, drawn by a swan, is seen to approach the shore; in it is Lohengrin, Elsa’s chosen Knight, who accepts Telramund’s challenge. Before they fight, Lohengrin betrothes himself to Elsa, first claiming her solemn promise never to question him as to his name or race, nor whence he came to her; Telramund is overcome in the combat and stripped of lands and honours.

ACT II.—Telramund and Ortrud (his wife) are watching outside the Palace, which resounds with mirth and revelry; they are determined yet to compass the ruin of Elsa and Lohengrin, and be reinstated in their former rank. Elsa appears on the balcony, and to her Ortrud makes a piteous appeal, which so effectually moves Elsa to compassion, that she promises to obtain the reprieve of Telramund’s sentence. She offers to shelter Ortrud for the night, who amid false protestations of gratitude, affects concern for the uncertainty of Elsa’s future happiness, and contrives to insinuate the first germs of suspicion in Elsa’s mind. They enter the abode of Elsa. The retainers and vassals assemble to form the bridal procession. Ortrud appears in the train of Elsa’s ladies; arrived at the steps of the Minster, she cannot restrain her haughty temper, and disputes Elsa’s right of precedence; in the midst of the ensuing commotion the King and Lohengrin enter. Lohengrin reproves his bride for holding converse with the evil-minded woman; they are proceeding to the church when Telramund interposes and accuses Lohengrin of sorcery, alleging the strange manner of his coming amongst them, and the mystery in which his name and rank are shrouded, in support of the declaration. The faith of the King and his Knights in Lohengrin however remains unshaken: doubts for a moment overwhelm Elsa, but she casts them aside; the train finally enters the church and they are united.

ACT III.—Elsa and Lohengrin are conducted to the bridal chamber by a train of Knights and Ladies, and for the first time are alone: doubt and suspicion by this time having taken complete possession of Elsa’s mind, she questions her husband with growing vehemence, unmindful of his warnings that her doubts must end their happiness, for that if she insist, to her he must reveal his secret. When their altercation is at its height, a murderous attempt is made on Lohengrin’s life by Telramund and four of his followers. Elsa, quick to perceive their intent, hands Lohengrin his sword, who strikes Telramund dead with a single blow. He then places Elsa in the care of her Ladies, charging them to lead her into the presence of the King. Before the King he meets her once more and reveals himself to be the son of Percival, and a Knight of the Holy Grail; being known, he is now bound to return to its mysterious guardianship. As he speaks, the swan, leading the skiff, appears again on the river, and to Elsa’s unspeakable grief he bids her an eternal farewell. Before he steps into the skiff he disenchant the swan, who is no other than Gottfried, transformed by Ortrud’s sorcery, and who now takes rightful possession of his Dukedom.

The musical score consists of several systems. The top system features a vocal line in G major with a treble clef and a piano accompaniment in the bass clef. The lyrics are in German and English. The second system continues the vocal line with the exclamation 'Ha!' and 'Ho!'. The third system shows a vocal line with the lyrics 'A war-rior!' and 'Lo, a war-rior!'. The fourth system continues the vocal line with 'Lo, a' and 'Seht, den'. The fifth system shows a vocal line with 'A swan?' and 'Ein Schwan?'. The sixth system continues with 'A swan? A' and 'Ein Schwan? Ein'. The seventh system shows a vocal line with 'What is't?' and 'A' and 'Was ist? Ein'. The bottom two systems show the piano accompaniment, which includes complex chordal textures and arpeggiated figures.

THIRD SCENE.

(Here the skiff, drawn by the swan, reaches the shore in the centre at the back of the stage; Lohengrin, in a silver coat of mail, with a shining helmet, his shield at his back, a little golden horn at his side, stands within it, leaning on his sword. Frederick gazes on Lohengrin in speechless amazement. Ortrud, who during the preceding had preserved a cold and haughty bearing, is seized by terrible consternation at the sight of the swan. All deferentially bare their heads.)

The image displays a page of musical notation for Wagner's opera 'Lohengrin'. It consists of eight systems of staves. The first system is labeled 'Sva.' and contains two staves. The second system is also labeled 'Sva.' and contains two staves. The third system is labeled 'Sva.' and contains two staves. The fourth system contains two staves, with a 'Wind.' part in the upper staff and a piano accompaniment in the lower staff. The fifth system contains two staves, both piano accompaniment. The sixth system contains two staves, both piano accompaniment. The seventh system contains two staves, with a 'cl.' (clarinet) part in the upper staff and piano accompaniment in the lower staff. The eighth system contains two staves, both piano accompaniment. The notation includes various musical symbols such as notes, rests, accidentals, and dynamic markings like 'mf', 'p', 'dimin.', 'f', and 'molto cresc.'. There are also performance instructions like 'Ped.' and 'Wind.'.
